Did you know?

Local wildflowers in your backyard...

Working with Ecology Consulting, located in Crookwell, has been great exploring our own backyard. I mentioned in the September newsletter that we complete pre-clearance of native flora and fauna before any construction works are started. As you can see from this photo to my left one paddock is exotic pasture for stock and in contrast is a native bush paddock wild with native plants and most likely animals. While completing the pre-clearance we had a great time exploring this bush paddock and seeing the local native plants our shire has to offer. Seeds from these plants are collected at the right time to replace any native areas damaged during construction.

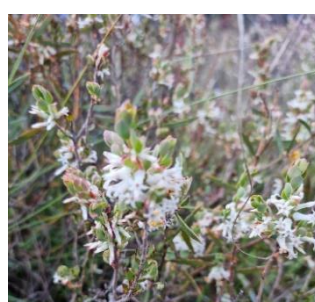

The next photo to the right is a native grass paddock abloom with local native wildflowers. Have you been in your native bush paddock lately? Have look at the abundance of native flora this season has given us. Here is a few Finbar from Ecology Consulting has identified for you. Why not take the kids for a wander. Upper Lachlan Landcare have a great book Global Power Generation Australia was happy to put funding towards through our Community Grants program. The book published this year on Native flora could be used as a reference when you go for your paddock walk.
